

Alfonso Echazarra is an Analyst in the Directorate for Education and Skills at the OECD where he currently works on the Programme for International Student Assessment (PISA). He is currently leading a report on teaching and learning strategies and has recently contributed to a report on low performing students.

Alfonso holds a BA in Political Science from Complutense University of Madrid, a MA in Social Sciences from Carlos III - Juan March Institute (Spain) and a DPhil in Social Statistics from the University of Manchester.